on the floor of the Wynn Casino. Steve Wynn certainly knows how to make things interesting.

La Cave at the Wynn

We settled for lunch rather than a new Ferrari. The Wynn offers a number of fine and casual dining restaurants. We chose the smaller La Cave Wine and Food Hideaway where we sat outside in a beautiful patio setting. An interesting salad, The La Cave Caesar, is served with the whole heart of romaine wrapped with a thick slice of prosciutto and a lemon anchovy dressing.

Painting Women Exhibit

Our driver from Presidential Limousine (without question, the best limousine service you will ever hire) picked us up to take us to the Bellagio for a tour of its "Painting Women" exhibit. Numerous works of art are found throughout Bellagio, but this exhibit is located in Bellagio's Gallery of Fine Art that used to house the private collection of Steve Wynn.

Dinner and the Theatre

That evening we were taken to the Monte Carlo Resort and Casino for an early dinner at Yusho, where they serve what's called "street food" because it's all about the simple flavors of authentic street food. My "On the Rocks" treatment began with a body brushing and a scented polish. Afterwards, a massage with hot stones that was so relaxing I almost slept. We ended with the signature Pink Hair and Scalp Mud treatment and total bliss does not begin to describe the state I was in.

It's hard to comprehend how many beautiful hotels are back to back to back. Sometimes it's hard to tell where

Bauman Rare Books

Totally relaxed by now, I really needed a nap, but you don't nap in Las Vegas so we walked around The Shoppes at The Palazzo and went to Bauman Rare Books — a treasure in the heart of Las Vegas. I actually got to hold in my hand the first edition of Margaret Mitchell's "Gone with the Wind." The classic is in its original dust jacket, signed by Mitchell and would sell for $20,000.

Bellagio

I'll just go ahead and say it — I really, really love Bellagio. Although now part
